SHE BLAZED THE TRAIL

Clara Foltz opened a major door for women in 1878, when she became the first female member of the State Bar.

By Barbara Babcock

Pioneering was not always a glamorous story. Clara Foltz, who fought for women's rights and was one of the first female lawyers in California, knew that. She was a woman ahead of her time, and she often had to battle against the prevailing attitudes of her era.

Foltz was born in 1833 in Jefferson County, Pennsylvania. She moved to California in 1855, where she married Henry Foltz. Together, they had six children, but Clara was determined to make a difference in the world of law.

In 1878, Foltz became the first female member of the California Bar. She was a true pioneer in the field of law, and her experiences are still inspiring today.

Foltz's journey to the bar was not easy. She had to fight against the prevailing attitudes of the time, which viewed women as inferior to men. But Foltz was determined to make a difference, and she refused to let anyone stand in her way.

In the end, Foltz's determination paid off. She became a leader in the field of law, and her legacy lives on today. Her story is a reminder that even in the face of adversity, one can make a difference.

California Catches Up

California has always been a leader in many ways. Now, it's time to catch up with some of the technological advancements that are happening all over the United States.

With the growth of the internet and mobile devices, California is finally catching up with some of the other states. The state has been slow to adopt new technologies, but things are starting to change.

For example, California has been slow to adopt new technologies in the field of education. But with the growth of the internet and mobile devices, California is finally catching up with some of the other states.

California's success in the field of technology is a testament to the state's commitment to innovation. And it's a reminder that even in the face of adversity, one can make a difference.
